Narrative Report (limit to 500 words)

My four primary interests are: 1) Private practice and medical education: conceptualizing and delivering the highest quality clinical care and teaching. 2) Assessment of professional competence according to standards set by the American Board of Psychiatry and Neurology. 3) Dissemination of credible, authoritative medical commentary on human behavior and psychopathology as medical expert in the national media, and 4) Taking a leadership role in the development of national standards for telemedicine and telepsychiatry.

I have expertise in integrated treatment of patients. My clinical work is focused and interactive, incorporating analytically oriented psychotherapy, object-relations theory, and self-psychology. Additionally, I draw from cognitive-behavioral therapy, dialectical behavioral therapy, and social rhythm therapy. I am known for my treatment expertise in mood and anxiety disorders, attention deficit disorder, and eating disorders. This integration of clinical approaches is the special value I bring to the health of my patients and to the educational development of students, residents, peers in the healthcare professions, and the general public.

My academic work is directed towards developing, refining and teaching conceptual skills necessary for the highest quality care. I participate in conferences locally and nationally, collaborating to develop more effective ways to utilize vital information regarding evidence-based practices and professional standards for competency. I have made great strides in, educating the general public about the mental health through mass media and social media. At the American Board of Psychiatry and Neurology, I served as a standing member of national examining teams for two decades, providing experience and quality control. I served on three ABPN committees responsible for reestablishment of the Part II Oral examinations and for revision of the ABPN professional certification in Psychiatry.

With the publication of my first book, The Emotional Calendar: Understanding Seasonal Milestones to Become Happier, More Fulfilled and in Control of your Life, Times Books, Henry Holt & Co., New York, 2011, I became increasingly sought after by national radio and television. I am now recognized as a psychiatrist expert in the media, providing commentary on current events, human behavior, motivation, and psychopathology. My major message is that mental health needs to be discussed more openly and understood by all -- that more informed dialogue about the practical treatment of mental illness is helpful and required.

Lately, I have turned to telemedicine as a rising force, an increasingly assured channel through which medical care and behavioral health can and will be delivered. I am an avid student of the history of telemedicine. I have taken on a leadership role in establishing standards and practices through which safe and effective psychiatric care can be delivered. The goal is to determine and provide high quality cost-effective, efficient care with expertise for patients in both urban and rural areas. My goal is to help define standards for professional competence in practice with this emerging giant.
